Mendoza is situated at the foot of the Andes Mountains. In 1861 a violent earthquake devastated more than half of the city and the city was rebuilt with European-influenced architecture and has become a major tourist and university centre. The San Francisco Church walls are the only original ones still standing and are on display at the Aire Fondatrice Museum. The roads around Mendoza do not disappoint. Head towards Chile along a mountain road 3800 metres above sea level. Further along the Las Cuevas River has a natural bridge, the Puente del Inca, which served as a trade route to the Incas. Further south other adventures are possible, such as horseback expeditions, rafting, trekking and extreme sports amidst unspoiled wilderness and impressive landscapes.
