San Martin de los Andes is a nice little town situated in the central western area of the country at the foot of the Andes Mountains. It started off as a charming Andean village but has grown to accommodate the many tourists and passage of people travelling to the mountains and many surrounding lakes. It is also the gateway to the Lanin National Park which covers nearly 200 000 hectares of forests and lakes. Some trees are thousands of years old and some animal species are unique to the area. There are 20 lakes in total in the area with Lacar and Nonhué being the busiest. The tranquil waters of the lakes are prime fishing spots for trout and salmon. Lago Correntoso is renowned for its rainbow trout.
