Balmaceda is situated on the shores of the Ultima Esperanza, at the foot of towering fjords. Balmaceda faces the Andes and is an excellent starting point to discover the Serrano and Balmaceda glaciers and the Torres del Paine National Park. The park was declared a UNESCO World Reserve in 1978 and takes its name from two granite peaks rising over 3000 metres. The region has caves, lagoons, lakes and century-old stories, as well as hundreds of bird species and a diverse vegetation.
