Iquique is a major port city at the extreme north of the country in the Atacama Desert. The climate is very dry but the maximum temperatures are bearable. The symbol of the city, the Clock Tower, rises in the centre of Arturo Prat Square. The city still retains many old buildings, some of which are classified as national monuments and show the classic colonial and neoclassical influences. There are beautiful beaches along the coast. In the desert you can see ancient and contemporary geoglyphs, large designs or motifs made on the ground by rocks or stones or other natural materials.
