The capital and principal port of the country, Tallinn will surprise you with its charm. Far from the large cities and mega-capitals found elsewhere in Europe, this little town is equally seductive as it is captivating. Given its strategic location as a port in the Baltic Sea, it has been a highly coveted location since the 13th century, and has since been commercially developed. After being considered part of Denmark, Sweden, and finally Russia, Estonia became an independent country between 1918 and 1920, with Tallinn serving as the capital.

Since 1997, Tallinn has been classified as a UNESCO world heritage site. Despite the many attacks, sieges, and bombardements suffered by the medieval city center throughout history, it has not lost its charm. Make sure not to miss out on historical buildings such as City Hall and the Old Thomas weather vane, Saint Olav and Saint Nicolas churches, the cathedral of Alexander Nevsky, Toompea mansion, the "Kik in de Kok" tour, and the majestic panoramas of the city from surrounding hills.
