Reykjavik was founded in 874 by the Viking King Ingólfur Arnason. This extensive city is sheltered from the winds and strong tides and actually has a relatively mild climate thanks to the Gulf Stream. Reykjavik alone accounts for the vast majority of governmental, industrial, commercial, cultural and human activity in the country. This unique city will surprise you with its multicoloured roofs, pools of naturally hot water and large green areas, such as the special birch forest or Halla Park. Some buildings have interesting architecture, such as the National Theatre, the Nordic House, Republic Garden and the Cathedral.
