Situated 30km south of Swakopmund, Walvis Bay has a simpler name but a more complicated history. The first Europeans to explore this territory were the Portuguese, although the city was built by the English to monitor the activities of the Germans in Swakopmund while serving as West Africa's leading maritime trade port. Eventually the city was administered by South Africa and then finally Namibia.

The style of the city is somewhat American with long, parallel streets named numerically such as 1st Street or 2nd Street. The city has an agreeable climate and tourism is generally based around its marine activity. Departing from Walvis Bay in your camping car or 4x4 you can admire the Namib Desert dunes and the rich surrounding wildlife.
