Harare was formerly called Salisbury when it was under the colonial influence of the British South Africa Company. Now it is a modern metropolis with skyscrapers and chic suburbs. The city gained independence in 1980 but still maintains some important colonial buildings, such as the indoor market, the Buildings of Parliament and City Hall. The city centre is quite compact and completely pedestrian with many shops, malls, bookstores etc. If you want to relax and avoid the bustle of the city head to the Harare Gardens, a haven of peace, with a rainforest and a miniature Victoria Falls. The National Gallery displays unique pieces of African art and ethnography and the National Archives display a memory from the colonial times of Rhodesia until modern Zimbabwe. Harare is an ideal starting point to head towards the Zimbabwean parks. You can also travel to Namibia, Botswana and South Africa.
